

Abstract

The process for in vitro differentiation of neuronal stem cells comprises contacting the cells with a substance which inhibits a reaction of the Wnt signal transduction pathway, and culturing of said cells under conditions which enable said cells to propagate and/or differentiate.

In a preferred embodiment of the process, the neuronal stem cells differentiate into brain cell-like cells.